With Belgium placated the allies and associated governments have made one important step toward the treaty of peace.

"I have done my best. I think it is a good peace," the words of Premier Clemenceau, might indicate resignation as well as satisfaction.

Petrograd having gone into the hands of the Finnish red guards, it is about time to change the name of the city again. Petrograd is the real football of the war era.

The "lost battalion," we are now informed, was not lost at all; it was the remainder of the American army that was lost, the so-called "lost battalion" simply waiting for the other fellows to find themselves. The correction is duly noted and given full credence.

The time is moving along rapidly toward the anniversary of the starting of the great war, and if the peace conference negotiations do not quicken their pace it will be Aug. 1 before the treaty can be signed by the Germans. In that case a name might suggest itself for the war by calling it the five years' war, although one has to admit that there were so many extraordinary features connected with the recent struggle as to warrant a more distinctive name.

Enough politics has developed in Massachusetts as the result of the war to last for a decade, it would seem. Various officers of the 26th division apparently have returned with some rather well-defined ideas concerning their own participation in political matters and perhaps their elevation to positions of preferment, so that the stock of candidates is sufficient to last for many years if the people of Massachusetts propose to be guided by the military flavor in picking their officials.

As the result of the recent addition of a million and a half dollars to the endowment fund of the institution, the professors of Amherst college are to receive an increase in salary of several hundred dollars each, the full professors getting as high as $3,200. In view of the fact that the pay of college professors has been stationary most of the time during the past decade or two this indication of a new trend upward is encouraging. For the amount of the training which a college professor requires and for the kind of service he renders the amount is none too large in Amherst, where the standard is high.

We repeat what we have said before, that the American people ought to make it a strong oversubscription to the Victory loan in order to encourage the new secretary of the treasury, Carter Glass, who took the portfolio in the cabinet under somewhat trying conditions. He took the job when the work of the war activities, including that of raising money, was not completed and when it was rather difficult for a new man to break into the work. Therefore, the people, realizing his position, should rally to his support besides showing their patriotism to the government.

In view of the restrictions, impositions and actual suffering which were imposed on French civilians during the war, the German peace delegation now in Paris cannot reasonably complain if they are not allowed the freedom of the city; yet they seem to have come to Paris—some of them at least—with the notion that they were out on a sight-seeing tour and privileged to enjoy all the advantages that they were able to pay for. Therefore, it has become necessary to restrict their movements to a certain extent and to show them that the good nature of the allies is not to be presumed upon by a conquered nation.

The authorities who are bending every effort to ferret out the mystery of the death of Mrs. Harry E. Broadwell have the sympathetic support of the community and of the state. They really deserve more than that; they deserve to receive any information which individuals may have as tending to show the movements of the murdered woman from the time she left her home on West street early Saturday evening up to certain events which took place later that night. Without a doubt the movements of the woman for a considerable time and up to the events which came to their swift denouement in homicide are known to some persons. Mrs. Broadwell may have been seen and recognized; she may have been seen in the moving picture houses, as she ostensibly left home for the purpose of attending the "movies." Evidence concerning such movements can be presented without chance of incrimination, of course, and such evidence should be presented to State's Attorney Davis or some other official connected with the case just as soon as possible so that the voluntary activities of the woman may be followed and the time for the actual commission of the crime narrowed down. Every trace of the woman from the time she left her home at about 7:30 o'clock will prove valuable to the investigators in getting to the tragic events that happened later. So any repugnance which persons with information may feel should be overcome by the consciousness that a great public service would be done by acquainting the officials with the movements of the woman during the early part of Saturday evening, May 3.

THE ALLIES IN SOLID FRONT AGAIN.

The return of the Italian delegation to the peace conference at Paris means the collapse of the handicaps to the drawing up of the treaty of peace and the speedy winding-up of the final affairs relating to the inter-allied conference before the Germans are formally and officially appraised of the terms upon which they will have to sign the treaty. This action of the Italian delegation to the conference comes as a welcome relief from a strain which was getting to be rather serious in allied circles albeit there had always been a feeling that sooner or later Italy would return to the conference and maintain her place as one of the five great powers in whom is vested much of the authority for the proposed league of nations. The allies will, therefore, present a solid front to the Germans and the other powers of the enemy when they come along in turn for the acceptance of the treaty of peace; and it will be a front which is quite in accord notwithstanding the recent disagreements. From now on there should be an accelerated speed at Paris and, later, at Versailles.

PLAINFIELD

Mrs. Mildred Page proved an ideal hostess when she entertained the Mothers' club on Thursday last. Nine members and four visitors were present. Several of the mothers sewed or planned for more sewing and all enjoyed the social hour. The members gave short readings about mothers and each also gave a quotation about mothers. The program was as follows: "Mothers in Politics," Myrtle Cummings; "A Woman in 1900," Jessie Davis; "Faithfulness," Maudie Bartlett; "What Shall We Have to Eat?" Daisy Bartlett; "Don't Wait Until Mother Is Gone," Gertrude Maxwell; "An Old-Fashioned Woman," Clara Bartlett; "Never Again Cheap Pleasures," Sorina Neilson; "The Real Mother," Anice Bartlett; "The Greatest Service," Alice Batchelder. The supper was a veritable feast, to which all did ample justice. Place cards and daffodils were furnished members. The next meeting will be with Bessie Welch Thursday afternoon, May 15.

MORETOWN

The Methodist Episcopal church goes "over the top" with its centenary drive. Last week was centenary week in the local church and an effort was made to secure pledges for the five years' budget apportioned the Moretown church. The entire budget for the five years is $4,775. Of this amount the ladies' aid society accepted as its share of the task $120 per year for five years. The Sunday school also did its part by accepting the full quota assigned it, namely, $80 per year for five years. The remainder was secured by a house-to-house canvass. One of the remarkable facts revealed by the canvass was that, with a membership of 32 the church secured 104 subscribers. When the final accounts were gone over it was found that the required $4,775 had been oversubscribed by more than $2,000, the grand total being $6,827. In addition the ladies' aid society received a gift of a $1,000 Liberty bond. The interest on the same is to be used for the work of the society, the gift to be known as "The Mary Smith Ward Memorial fund." The auxiliary of the Woman's Foreign Missionary society also received a gift of a $1,000 Liberty bond, this also to be known as "The Mary Smith Ward Memorial fund," and the interest to be used for missionary work. But this is not all, as the church also received a gift of $500 for a parsonage fund for repairs and improvements, and bills to the amount of $160.50 standing against the church for repairs were cancelled.
